

"What I'm about to tell you may seem offensively simple, but it's indescribably important: If you forget God is there, you won't talk to Him! Simple, right? But it's true. When we don't focus on God's presence, we don't pray. Instead, we go it alone. We find our thoughts moving in the wrong direction, and our lives quickly follow.

But when we realize God is there, we realize we can talk to Him. When things are bad, instead of just feeling down, we look up. We look up and find a God who loves us and has the power to help. We need to practice God's presence, habitually reminding ourselves that God is with us."

Anxiety is at epidemic levels, especially among our younger generations, who've been glued to technology and social media since they can remember. This combination of technology and anxiety is no coincidence.

Social media pulls us out of our present mind and localized body and sets our attention on global events and needs but rarely offers us any meaningful response.

We don't know how to discern between possibility and localized faithfulness, and we simply don't know where to mentally attend anymore, because we're everywhere at once, and we feel the pressure of being all there, knowing all the things, and doing it all perfectly.

We have organized the Holy Spirit out of our operation. We have big screens, skinny jeans, and fog machines. What we don't have is a towering move of God. What does not thunder forth from our pulpits is truth—truth that convicts and transforms—truth spoken by a broken, loving vessel that is unconcerned with popularity.

Vessels of Fire and Glory

What the church needs today is not more new organizations or more novel methods, but men whom the Holy Ghost can use—men of prayer, men mighty in prayer. The Holy Ghost does not flow through methods, but through men. He does not anoint plans, but men—men of prayer.

Power Through Prayer
E. M. Bounds

The kingdom of God is ultimately about allegiance. Jesus described it as being like a seed, invisible to the eye, implanted and sprouting in the hearts of those who have pledged their lives to Him.

And so, in order to understand and orient ourselves toward the kingdom of God, we must look at the heart. If our hearts are divided according to contradictory allegiances, we cannot and will not experience the joy and life Jesus promised us.

Unless God has raised you up for this very thing, you will be worn out by the opposition of men and devils. But if God be for you, who can be against you? Are all of them together stronger than God? O be not weary of well doing! Go on, in the name of God and in the power of His Might.
