

When the next revival comes, it will come as a surprise to everybody and especially to those who have been trying to organize it.

Revival
Martyn Lloyd-Jones

Pentecost came with the sound of a mighty rushing wind, a violent blast from heaven. Heaven has not exhausted its blast, but our danger is we are getting frightened of them.

Smith Wigglesworth

Right now, in the church, I believe we are seeing evidence of the Spirit brooding as we witness an increased intensity in praise and worship, interest in prayer, and fervency for outreach and service. These are signs that the Holy Spirit is moving among us.

Every great move of God since Pentecost was met with controversy. When we enter into greater realms of His glory and presence, it challenges our control. The greater glory of God we experience, the less control we have. The less control we have, the more submitted and surrendered we are to Him.

The move of God is a sacred and holy thing;
we have no right to touch it or steady it.
Rather, we need to take our cues from the Holy Spirit, submitting to His every step. The degree to which we embrace this protocol will be the degree that we see the greater glory flowing out of the people of God.
