

I was at the gym one morning trying to complete my workout with a good attitude. I thought I looked too busy to pray when a woman approached and asked for prayer. Her son was facing serious challenges and needed a breakthrough. She immediately knelt in the middle of the gym in front of everyone. So I followed her lead.

In the following months, we prayer several times. In the process, I made a new friend and I no longer see the gym as a place where prayer is awkward. The faith of a woman opened the door, and I just followed along. Prayer can be more than a conduit for making our requests known to God; it can be a conduit for community change.

The gospel is more than a message on how to get saved and then “hold on” until Jesus comes back. His work on the cross was more than just a payment for our sins. It was also the destruction of the rule and reign of Satan.

God designed that everything that has breath would worship Him. The lack of morals in the church has polluted our worship, but there is a new generation of worshipers arising, a new group of leaders who will not compromise. A group of worshipers who will sing the sounds of heaven.

Dancers who will dance to the beat of His heart. Worshipers who will not seek to obtain through fame what can only come by the cross.

As you follow Jesus and allow the word of God to reshape you, it will rebuild you so you can function as originally designed. As you obey it, the word of God will change your life in every dimension: your relationships, your thoughts, your habits, and your choices. These changes affect the trajectory of your life and your legacy—for the better.
